

With this brochure we want to tell you about our center - what it looks like, what kind of people they will welcome you and what is about to happen. We'd like this to help put your mind at ease.

Our center is child friendly .

A psychologist or social worker will meet you at our center a worker or a teacher and he will show you all the rooms, you will tell him who he is and what he does at the center, he will introduce you with the other people who work there. He will explain if not you understand something, you can ask him.

When you come to the center, we would very much like you to tell us how you feel, what you need, what questions you have? We're going to ask you about every thing that's going to happen, what do you think, how do you think it should be best, so that when the adults decide they can try to comply with you.

In our center, we try to work together specialists from different intuitions, so that you don't have to go to all the different places - to a lawyer, to the police, to the court, to a psychologist. They are all here together.

All
under one roof

Blue room

In the center there is
"blue room".

It is a special room for children where they can tell stories what happened to them, what they saw happening, and importantly the police to know.

In the blue room which it may not be blue, a specialist who knows to talk to a child will asks you questions about to be able to tell of the police, or what's going on in court happened. In this room it will be just you and the specialist who will asking you questions

On the other side of the glass, will be the policemen, the judge, and everyone for whom it matters to hear your story. They will have headphones, for to hear better what you say

Psychological support

In our center you can get and support from psychologists, social workers, teachers.

At meetings with them, you can talk about yourself, your feelings, worries or fears. At these meetings you will play, discuss and the most important will be you.

The psychologist does not insist that you answer every question, the conversations with psychologists are different from the ones you brought into the glass room.

You can talk to the psychologist about how you feel, what's wrong with you you are afraid, what you think about, whether you can sleep and whether it happens to you have nightmares.

With the psychologist you can feel safe and calm. He is listening carefully.

You can do different things while talking, like drawing or to play.

You can share with the psychologist everything that worries you, and he will understand.

You can ask him everything that interests you, or you don't understand how and saying if you're not feeling well, you'd like something to change.
